14 ▼ I don't think any of us want it. We know what it would entail. It's terrible, a horrifying thought to see on US soil, and something no patriot wants.
That, however, does not mean that we're unwilling to defend ourselves from this encroachment. The time of retreat, of placating, of playing nice is done.
Do not fire the first shot, do not throw the first blow, but if they mean to continue on their course, ar push for their tyranny, then let the civil war begin. Tomorrow, the world is watching the last bastion freedom on the planet. What will the sunset bring? ✓ 10 Maybe. It's not that anybody wants armed "rebellion" (ie revolution ie how the union was founded in the first place). But the founders warned us that this day might come. It probably should have come a lot sooner. It would have come in 1860 if the Northerners had seen how things would turn out.

I understand the concern for glow riggers. But it's 1775 and you come off as the guy in the corner going "No no no Thomas Jefferson is destroying our optics we need to preserve the colonies from within just be respectful and peacefully protest guys"

permalink save report block reply

10 not only did they warn us they gave us a legal way to fight back and have a chance of keeping control of our republic. The Bill of Rights is so eloquent and just perfectly thought out. For them to be able to foresee the need to have 2A, especially in order to protect our 1A... I'm always in awe when I think about the forethought of those men so long ago. They knew... they ingrained our constitution with what was needed to prevent govt overreach.

1 You would probably think tossing the tea into the boston harbor or firing on brits at lexington concord would be a "tempet tantrum" or maybe the signing of the declaration of independence? Good thing our founders had guns and more balls than you do. People like you will welcome your new chinese masters with open arms as long as you get to keep the AARP card, social security bread crumbs, and senior discount coffee at mcdonalds. A true simpleton you are.

permalink parent save report block reply

▲ KuzoKevin [S] 1 months ago +1 / -0

1 Then you don't know me. I've read multiple biographies of every single one of our founding fathers. They all tried to avoid bloodshed until they had no other choice.

Sam Adams was a hothead, but his cousin John represented British soldiers after the Boston Massacre.

Most people who call for a second revolution have little insight into the complexity of our first.

I don't think our founders would want to live in a country where the rules were decided by the faction with the most firepower. "Faction", btw, does not mean centralized government.

I am far from simple, friend. Voter fraud is justification for armed revolution? That's a simple view.

permalink parent save report block reply

▲ Joesf23 1 months ago +1 / -0

1 It isnt just "voter fraud". This is our own elected people being bought and paid for by CCP and then allowing CCP and other countries who hate us be allowed to rig the elections. Do you not see this as a major fucking problem? Do you not see the judicial system's corruption and rule of law being only applied to our side while the commies run wild in the street? You can't peacefully resolve something this fucking broken. You think a peaceful protest is really going to make the commies go "ohh gezz, we sorry, let's hold hands". We can't coexist with pure evil. I don't know why this is so hard for you to understand. There is no "next time" if this bullshit is allowed to continue unchecked. We have done everything legally and peacefully up to this point and we have been laughed at.

This has nothing to do with keyboard girth. It has everything to do with the relative merits of our ideas.

1 I don't entirely understand the question.

Armed rebellion means civil war. It has been gamed out at length elsewhere.

No, Trump does not want civil war to be his legacy.

0 No one here WANTS armed rebellion.

▼ Some just don't shy away from it as the final, last resort granted to The People by God and guaranteed through the Constitution, against unjust and illegal tyranny.

0 Down-vote 57 points? That's a record for me, and I'm damn proud to own it.

▼ Fuck off.

0 I think not. I want an armed revolution.

▼ Been on The Donald since 2016.

1 Well, you go right ahead, but you should ask Trump a single question. Does he want you to use force of arms?

▼ We all know the answer to that question. Your bravado is self serving more than love for Trump.
